

About The American University of Paris

Founded in Paris as an American-style liberal arts college in 1962, The American University of Paris – which celebrated its 60th anniversary in the 2021–22 academic year – is an international university located at the meeting point of France, Europe and the world. It is the largest educational institution in Europe to use the US higher education system. Accredited by the Middle States Commission on Higher Education, the University has at the core of its mission the commitment to providing a student-centered, academically rigorous, transformative and career-enabling education. Students representing more than a hundred nationalities benefit from small class sizes, which combine liberal arts inquiry with an active approach to learning. World-class faculty members teach in English and the university offers 27 undergraduate majors and 4 core fields of graduate study. The University's MA in Global Communications has received RNCP accreditation in France. AUP's 20,000 alumni live and work in 145 countries around the globe. For more information visit www.aup.edu.

Contact (United States):

Barbara Reno,
Co-chair, President Search Committee
250 486 2133 (EST)
Breno2046@gmail.com

Contact (France):

Kilian Ordelheide,
Director of Communications and Outreach
+33 (0)1 40 62 08 32
kordelheide@aup.edu

###